All Eyes on Her – L.E. Flynn

Was it an accident or murder? If you like to solve a mystery, this book is for you. The story is told from everyone's perspective, but the main suspect, Tabby. Her boyfriend falls from a cliff and dies. Everyone has an opinion of what really happened and tell about the events leading up to that day. It's up to you to figure out the truth and what really happened.

If you like this book, I also liked Last Girl Lied to by the same author.

Indigenous Focus

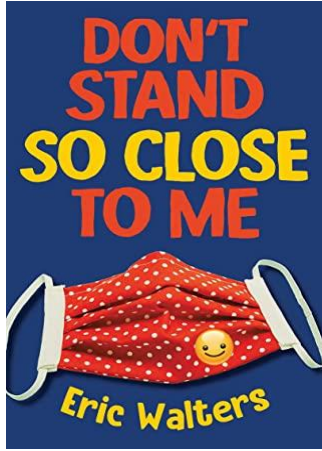

If I Go Missing – Brianna Jonnie

This book is based on excerpts from a letter that Brianna wrote to Winnipeg's police chief. Her concerns regarding the police's negligence in finding missing and murdered Indigenous women and girls prompted her to ask the police chief to not treat her the same if she were to go missing. She tells him that she does not do illegal activity so please look for her if she goes missing because she has not run away. It is a powerful and necessary look at the discrepancies prevalent in how law enforcement deals with Indigenous peoples.

Don't Stand So Close to Me – Eric Walters

Quinn and her friends are thrilled that spring break is extended because of the virus, however, the impact of the COVID-19 pandemic soon becomes apparent. Her father is a doctor and is isolating away from the family. None of her friends' lives are the same either. Quinn comes up with an idea to bring the community together during this time of isolation. This book is a reflection of the reality we are living.
